

CELEBRATING CHILDREN'S DAY

Jawahar Lal Nehru rightly quoted "let us sacrifice our today so that our children can have better tomorrow".

For centuries, the parents and faculties have shaped the personalities of students doing several roles of guide, motivator or counsellor. But are we able to manage the childhood of these millennials today as per the wishes our Nehruji? Are we crafting a bright future for our country through our relentless efforts to guide learners to glory? There seems to be a big question mark on parenting today - whether parenting parents or our children. So, my idea of celebrating Children's Day this year stems out of these important questions.

All teachers will invite the students, their parents and grand parents of their classes for full day on 14th Nov and organize different interesting age-appropriate activities for all of them. This will give them a window of opportunity to spend quality time amongst them. Since both the parents are working in present framework and their hectic schedules of work life do not allow them to fulfill their responsibilities towards their parents and their children, this will be a godsend opportunity for them.

Our this collaborative enterprise will improve relations of all the four stakeholders of education here- teachers, children, parents and grandparents and help the learners to take right steps in future to ensure successful careers. The upshot will be harmonious relationships amongst all collaborators which is the essence of education. We have to keep in mind the growing role of grand parents in today's context.

Its rightly quoted by Abigail Van Buren "If we want our children to turn out well, spend twice as much time with them and half as much money".
